

Interflow grows with the flow

In a response to healthy and consistent company growth, trenchless provider Interflow has relocated to new offices in Sydney and Adelaide and invested in a new cured-in-place lining facility.

THE SYDNEY HEAD office, previously located in Amax Avenue, Girraween, has moved around the corner to 254 Toongabbie Road, Girraween, into a larger and more modern building.

The upgrade also includes a new workshop area, which has allowed improvements to processes and safety. A new cured-in-place lining facility is also now located at the premises.

The new Adelaide office, meanwhile, is located at 233 South Terrace, Wingfield, and will improve Interflow's support capabilities in South Australia.

According to a company spokesperson, the relocations and infrastructure investments are a preparation for forecast growth in the near future as the company continues to add new technologies and services to its portfolio, as well as extend its reach into new regions. 📍
